the North Pole was First to Develop Life Forms.

In the attainment of equilibrium, the axial tilt of the Earth tends to draw the water portion more to the equatorial circumference, the preponderance of the waters of the Polar is at the South Pole. With this preponderance of the waters at the South Pole at the beginning of the Polar Revolutions, it will show how the North Polar region was the first to experience a more gradual and equalized finalation of land and water elements; a more gradual and generalized cooling process without sudden or rapid accumulation of ice masses as just mentioned, affording, with the diffusion of solar energy and radiated heat, all climatic changes necessary to support or life forms as known, recognized, and understood by academic science.

Polar Revolutions to continue.

These Polar Revolutions will now continue throughout the life of the planet, but at such rates that the tropical and polar climates, seasons, and temperature changes will alter not suddenly, but gradually, yet allowing complete topographical changes of environment for all the varied forms of life expression have existed or are yet to be.

Nutation.

Besides the Earth motions described, there is another motion, a certain "tremulousness" of the Pole, called "nututation." The motion of the pole of the ecliptic around the Pole of Earth describes a pericyclic figure which to form a volute, which "increases in every 25,000 years until it reaches the Equator, by the present rate of the Pole's apparent motion, there must have been traced an innumerable spiral having 22 or 23 rounds. The rate and order of the Polar Motion is, in 45 times 25,000 years INVERT THE ORDER OF THE POLES."

North Pole Once Tropical.

The principal point that interests us as Rosicrucian students is, that the reversal resulting in the Southern Hemisphere being brought to its present position, at the same time caused the most intense tropical conditions on this planet to obtain for a time at the Northern Polar Region.

Life Always Existent.

Life has always existed upon this and every other planet, but life in any of the forms in which science of any school could recognize it could not exist or manifest objectively until this point in Earth's history.

Life First Appears at North Pole.

From this fact we shall see that life as known and recognized by academic science began its objective manifestation at the NORTH POLE for the following reasons:

- 1st. A study of form, type, species and genus in every department of life, shows that all must have a common point of departure, further evidenced by their unvarying conformity to well defined laws as to type and locale.
- 2nd. All schools of science, academic and occult, agree with slight variations that at one time this globe was an intensely hot, incandescent mass.
- 3rd. That in due course of time this fiery globe has cooled down to its present temperature by radiation of its heat into space.
- 4th. That the existence of the primary rocks of igneous origin, together with still existent heat activities on a large scale, cannot be accounted for except upon the hypothesis that the planet WAS at one time an incandescent mass.
